Periodicals of Interest in Applied Linguistics & TESOL
Compiled by Michael Lessard-Clouston
Version 9.0. August 2011

The following list of periodicals (mostly journals) is of special interest to students and faculty in Applied Linguistics and TESOL. Maybe you are interested in learning about what has been studied concerning a particular topic, and you want to find a good literature survey or some examples of related empirical research. Perhaps you are looking for a theoretical framework or some work on research methods or aspects of language or education. Or you might want to try to publish that assignment you wrote for a course or the paper you presented at a conference. Well, here are various periodicals to consider – both to learn about what has been done and to contribute as a professional to the field.

The following list is not complete, but it includes some 710 journals and magazines in various areas of interest that we consider in our core and major elective classes in applied linguistics and TESOL. Some of these sources are only available online, others are only in print, and most others are available in some combination of these. While Biola does not subscribe to all of these, I have tried to indicate what we do have access to (where known), through on campus library subscriptions or online access. Thus these simple notations may be useful:

- L = usually in print in the Biola library (check the journals room or the stacks)
- O = an online (or mainly online) journal (visit the web site listed, usually for pdf files)
  - (most online journals have free access, but some only have partial access)
- L/O = available in print in the Biola library and in pdf online through Biola
  (but often only on campus or through the Biola library website)
- B/O = Biola’s subscription is only online (or through its library website) (pdf)

Here are some further caveats/comments/suggestions:

- The periodicals are listed alphabetically, and where possible I have included a URL, as many journals have abstracts, sample articles, their archives, etc., online.
- While not vouching for the content or quality of these periodicals, I find them to be good overall, with lots of interest. Most are refereed, yet some are not.
  While most are in language, linguistics, applied linguistics, or TESOL, some other journals are included because they publish relevant language-related articles.
  Most are in English, but many other languages are thankfully also represented.
- I have only included periodicals that are freely available (you don’t need to be a member of a group in order to receive or read them), though not all are free! Often we have to pay for good research. Yet check the library’s online periodicals directory (http://www.biola.edu/library/tools/periodicals/) first!
- One key way to use the pdf version of this list is to do key word searches (e.g., “discourse”, “Indonesia”, “writing”, “ESL”, etc.) to find relevant publications.

If you find updates or other periodicals that would be good to add to future versions of the list, please send me the information (title, publisher, URL, etc.), preferably by email (michael.lessard-clouston@biola.edu). Happy researching!
